Letter from the Chair

If my information is correct, it has been five years since this department published a newsletter. While it would be virtually impossible to summarize here all that has happened in the department during this time, I would like to take this opportunity to provide a general update on our programs, curriculum, and mission.

In the final paragraph of the Department of Modern and Classical Languages’ mission statement it is indicated that “the multifaceted programs of the department provide an opening to the world through language, literature, culture and civilization.” Our continued dedication to the goal of broadening cultural understanding makes our curriculum one of true diversity and one that provides students with the tools necessary for success in a number of professional fields. This curricular variety, we believe, also fosters personal growth through encouraging acceptance of many perspectives and points of view. Toward this end we have recently instituted two new programs of study: the German Studies Minor and the Double Major in Languages. The German Studies Minor has been designed to afford students who do not have linguistic abilities in German access to information about German culture, civilization, and artistic expression. Special courses have been created that will be cross-listed with other departments and that will foster an interdisciplinary approach to the study of this area. The Double Major in Languages will allow students interested in two languages to develop expertise in two modern languages by taking 45 credits in two languages, a total of 90 credits, instead of the excessive 110 credits formerly required of a student who wanted to major in two languages. It is hoped that this change will enable more students to investigate their interest in languages and culture.

The department maintains a strong relationship with the Linguistics Program and the East Asian Studies Program. The number of Linguistics majors has increased considerably during recent years, indicative of a very healthy program, and East Asian Studies attracts more and more students to its very engaging course offerings. The Department of Modern and Classical Languages at Western Washington University has an excellent reputation in the state for quality teacher preparation and we remain committed to excellence in language training for future teachers.

The 2000-01 academic year marks the second full year of operation for our new language laboratory in Haggard Hall. The lab offers both students and faculty a wide range of technological tools with which to enhance the learning of language and instructional innovation. The lab also houses an extensive film library as well as language software.

After a lapse of five years, we now plan to publish an edition of Interlingua every year. We invite your comments and would very much appreciate hearing about your achievements, travels, and professional accomplishments; a request for personal news items can be found on the last page of this newsletter. We also encourage you to keep in touch with us electronically by visiting the department’s new website at An electronic version of this newsletter will soon be posted there as well. Your interests and ideas are important to us, so please let us hear from you.

language, culture and calligraphy classes. Yupei Peng, a dynamic graduate student from Taiwan Normal University, taught Chinese during this academic year.

Classical Studies - Drs. Darrel Amundsen and Diane Johnson continue to design and teach courses in Latin, Greek, and Classical Studies. The section serves a great many students through GUR offerings such as Greek Mythology. Prof. Amundsen remains very active in research, contributing two chapters to the forthcoming A History of Medical Ethics (Cambridge University Press). Prof. Johnson is also very active in scholarship and continues to work on her second Ph.D., this one in Sanskrit.

French - Prof. Robert Balas, in addition to serving as Lab Director, continues to teach in the French section. His work on Québécois theatre, innovative teaching techniques, and the use of multi-media has been well received. Prof. Diane Coulombe has a limited-term appointment in the section and teaches both grammar and a conversation course on Quebec. Dr. Anne George has a number of forthcoming articles in academic journals and has been very active in the creation of CD-ROMs. She teaches French phonetics as well as other courses. Dr. Vicki Hamblin is the Faculty Advisor for both the French Honor Society and French Foreign Study. As a medievalist, she continues to be active in her field, having recently obtained a publication contract for her manuscript “Le Mistère du siège d’Orléans, une édition critique.”

German - Drs. Walter Robinson and Henrich Brockhaus have both retired after many years of service to the department. Dr. Sandra Breitenbach and Dr. Petra Fiero have joined the section and teach a variety of different courses. Dr. Breitenbach

Chinese - Dr. Kathleen Tomlonovic coordinates Chinese and also directs the East Asian Studies Program. She was awarded a sabbatical last year, during which she completed chapters for the Chinese publication Nine Hundred Years of Scholarship on Su Shi (1037-1101). Prof. Janet Xing earned tenure this year. A linguist by specialty, she is currently writing and editing Pedagogical Grammar of Chinese while preparing to take students to Kunming for the summer language program. Yang Ho-chin continues to teach... specializes in German linguistics and gives frequent conference presentations on a variety of topics, while Dr. Fiero works with Holocaust literature and has recently published an article on German-Turkish writer Alev Tekinay. Professors Walter Suess and Rudolf Weiss also teach in the section. Dr. Weiss is Director of Linguistics and has recently published some of his work on vocal mechanics; Dr. Suess is the Coordinator of German and is very involved with interdisciplinary projects as well as the “German for Business Purposes” course. Ingrid Kassler, the only limited-term faculty member in the section, contributes by inspiring beginning German students to cultivate a love of the language and culture.

Japanese - Dr. Michiko Yusa is the Coordinator of Japanese and teaches a variety of courses on language, culture, and literature. She is very active in her research and is awaiting publication of her books, Japanese Religions (Prentice Hall) and Zen Philosophy: An Intellectual Biography of Nishida Kitarō (Univ. of Hawaii Press). Dr. Massimiliano Tomasi earned tenure this year and will spend the first two quarters of next year in Japan working on the interdisciplinary research project entitled “Modernism in Kansai Japan.” Mr. Katsuhiko Ito has contributed his considerable enthusiasm and teaching skills to the first and second-year Japanese sequences.

Russian – Prof. Edward Vajda teaches courses in Russian as well as East Asian Studies and Linguistics. He is extremely active in research and has recently published his book Yeniseian Peoples and Languages with Curzon Press in England.

Spanish – Dr. Shaw Gynan is the Spanish Coordinator and is very active in his research on bilingualism. He will spend Fall Quarter in Paraguay on a Fulbright. Prof. Joan Hoffman is the Foreign Study Advisor for Spanish and has traveled to Spain recently in that capacity. She has published articles on Spanish author Emilia Pardo Bazán as well as Julia Alvarez and others.

John Underwood is justifiably proud of the textbook that he produced during his sabbatical last year and he continues in his capacity as Teaching Endorsement Advisor. Prof. Daniel Rangel Guerrero teaches classes on Latin American poetry and culture, but he also enjoys teaching grammar classes at both the second- and third-year levels. As Chair of the Department, Brent Carbajal teaches fewer classes than in the past, but those classes constitute his favorite part of the day. He specializes in contemporary Latin American narrative. Carbajal recently published his book The Veracity of Disguise in Selected Works of José Donoso with Mellen Press.

Spanish also relies on the very excellent services of a fine limited-term faculty: Amy Carbajal, Lynn Day, David Fiero, and Mary Anne Rangel. Amy Carbajal teaches first- and second-year Spanish and collaborates with Mary Anne Rangel on the annual Cinco de mayo celebration; Dr. Fiero teaches a variety of classes and recently presented a paper at a conference in Puerto Rico; Dr. Day does yeoman’s work at the first- and second-year level, and Mary Anne Rangel continues to inspire students with her very lively classes at the second-year level.

In teacher education, the department is pleased to count on the services of Mrs. Cynthia McCurdy. Mrs. McCurdy teaches part-time in the department, but her contribution is great.

Linguistics Update

WWU’s interdepartmental Linguistics Program has been operating as a pre-approved student designed major under the leadership of Dr. Weiss for some five years. As mentioned above, the program relies on the participation of many of the Modern and Classical Languages faculty members. The program enrolls more than 1,400 students in linguistics courses every year and is one of the fastest developing programs on campus. The program sponsors a yearly student colloquium, as well as a faculty speaker series. Guest speakers have included such notable linguists as Noam Chomsky, Merritt Ruhlen, Frederick Newmeyer and Peter Ladefoged.

This year the department has also welcomed Prof. Elizaveta Kótorova and Prof. Alexandra Kim, two visiting linguistics scholars from Russia.

Foreign Study News

The department continues extensive involvement with foreign study programs around the world. In cooperation with Western’s Office of International Programs and Exchanges, the department has created a number of foreign study opportunities. Most recently, Drs. Xing and Tomlonovic have worked to establish a relationship with Yunnan University in Kunming, China. See the Chinese Section website at http://wwu/~chinese/StudyAbroad.html for more information.

To give some idea of the extent of foreign study options at Western, in recent years students of French have studied in Angers, Grenoble, Besançon, Caen, Rennes, Nantes, Nice, Aix, Quebec, Martinique, and Madagascar. German students have studied in Berlin, Eichstaett, Marburg, Giessen, Trier, Braunschweig, Dortmund, Tuebingen, Freiburg, Graz, Salzburg, Linz, and Vienna. Spanish students have taken advantage of programs in Ecuador; Morelia, Mexico; Valdivia, Chile; Cádiz, Granada, Madrid, Segovia, Oviedo, Alicante, Seville, and Salamanca, Spain. Students of Japanese have a variety of study options in Tokyo.

Alumni News

Due to the long lapse between newsletters, we realize that the information below is most likely very dated. We include it here because it was provided in response to our last newsletter in 1996. Future contributions will appear in a much more timely manner.

A Student’s Perspective
As a double major in Spanish and Linguistics I am one of many students at Western involved with the Department of Modern and Classical Languages. Over the past three years I have developed an appreciation of the benefits of language study, and hope to outline here several of these notable qualities.

In general, it seems that the study of foreign language directly results in an affirmation of the similarity between all humans. In order to connect with a speaker of another language, we must resolve to cross the line of demarcation that our first language imposes upon us. Consequently, we provide ourselves with the means to learn from and impact a variety of individuals, societies and cultures.

The commitment to such diversity is clearly visible in the layout of the language majors. To successfully complete a Spanish major, for example, we must first demonstrate a solid understanding of the language, and then move onto apply these skills in more advanced classes. Upper-division courses in literature, culture, and composition not only amplify our comprehension of the language itself, but also expose us to the accomplishments of its speakers and encourage us to analyze and synthesize this information.

Due to the variety within its format, a foreign language major is applicable in a number of fields after graduation. Especially in our increasingly inter-connected and internationally focused world, a student of languages has the option to work in various occupations, enterprises, universities, and countries. It is therefore evident that language study affords us not only a greater awareness and appreciation of others, but a means of utilizing our skills in a practical and valuable fashion.
